VOCABULARY

hayai	2-kai
kuru / kimasu	~ kai
korekara	shisutemu-bu
yoga	~ bu
suru / shimasu	matto
shū ni	tsukau / tsukaimasu
shū	hē
~ ni	gambaru / gambarimasu

- 1 . Hayai desu ne.
- 2 . Shika-san
- 3 . Shika-san ni narrate iru n desu.

There are three points to be made about this sentence:

- (1) The particle ni, “from,” is used with the verb naraimasu, “to learn,” after the person from whom one receives lessons, in this case Shika.
- (2) Naratte iru is the plain, present-affirmative form (to be discussed shortly) of naratte imasu. Here ~ te iru denotes a habitual action.
- (3) By using n desu, Ms.Nakamura is offering an explanation of why she is doing yoga at the company. (For the basic usages of n desu, see p.57.)

- 4 . Hē.
- 5 . Ja, gambatte.

Gambatte is a shortened, less formal form of gambatte kudasai, from the verb gambarimasu, “to do one’s best.” Traditionally you used this expression to wish people good luck or encourage them. (omission)

II Asking for and Offering Explanations (1)

You use n desu ka to ask about another person’s circumstances, and n desu to make someone else better understand own. (omission)

Miruzu: Hayai desu ne. Maiasa kono jikan ni kuru n desu ka.

Nakamura: Iie. Kyō wa korekara yoga o suru n desu.

Here the question ending in n desu ka shows that Mr. Mills wants to know the reason why Ms. Nakamura has come to the office so early. Maiasa kono jikan ni kimasu ka and Maiasa kono jikan ni kuru n desu ka both mean “Do you come at this time every morning?” The difference is that the latter is asking not only for a yes or no, but also the reason. Yoga o suru n desu gives the reason. The following exchange, also from the Target Dialogue, is similar in terms of the speaker’s intent.

Miruzu: Yoga (o suru n desu ka) ?

Nakamura: Ee. Shisutemu-bu no Shika-san ni naratte iru n desu.

Miruzu: Koko de suru n desu ka.

Nakamura: Ee. Kono yoga-yō no matto o tsukau n desu.

(omission んですか = n desu ka      んです = n desu)

Complete the answers to the questions as in the example.

(P 58)

Expressing Frequency

The particle ni following a period of time means “per.” When a number and the counter kai, “times,” comes immediately after ni, the sentence tells you how many times per period someone does something or something happens.

For example:

Shū ni 2-kai yoga o narrate iru n desu.

Common periods include:

shū (= isshūkan)	a week
1-jikan	an hour
1-nichi	a day
tsuki (= ikkagetsu)	a month
nen(= 1-nen)	a year

The same ni + number formula but with a period instead of kai is also used.

Isshūkan ni 10-jikan gurai Nihon-go no benkyō o shimasu.

(To be continued to next page)

To review adverbs for expressing frequency (from Book 1)

itsumo always

yoku often

tokidoki sometimes

tama ni occasionally

amari not very often(used with a negative form)

zenzen not at all(used with a negative form)

Examples:

A: Yoku jogingu o shimasu ka.

B: Ee.

A: Mainichi suru n desu ka.

B: Mainichi dewa arimasen ga, shū ni itsuka gurai shimasu.

8 kaigi (honsha)	9 Nihon-go no ressun	10 jogingu	11 Nihon-go no ressun	12 jogingu	13 tenisu· sukūru	14 jogingu

Ex) Shū ni ikkai honsha de kaigi ga arimasu.

1)..... Nihon-go no ressun ga arimasu.

2)..... tenisu o naratte imasu.

3)..... jogingu o shite imasu.

USAGE NOTE

Especially in long sentences, Nihon-go no benkyō o shimasu ( example at left ) is often stated more simply as Nihon-go o benkyō shimasu. Both expressions means “I study Japanese.” Grammatically, benkyō is a noun followed by the particle o and the verb shimasu, whereas benkyō shimasu, with o left out, is itself considered a verb. Constructions of the latter type are called suru verbs and are extremely frequent in both spoken and written Japanese.
